The Lone Sentry.

The following beautiful lines were indited by Mr. James R. Randall upon the death of Gen. T. J. Jackson. The circumstances which occasioned the poem were these: Gen. Jackson's troops, after a long and weary march, were so much fatigued that when a halt was ordered almost nearly every man was asleep. The noble old hero guarded the camp alone that night:

Twas in the dying of the day, The darkness grew so still, She drowsy pipe of evening birds Was hushed upon the hill. Ashwart the shadows of the vale Slumber the men of might, As one lone sentry paced his round To guard the camp that night A grave and solemn man was he,

With deep and sombre brow, The dreamful eyes seemed hoarding up Some unaccomplished vow. His wistful glance peered o'er the plaju Beneath the starry light, As with the murmured name of God He watched the cump that night, The future opened unto him

Manassas and the Valley march, Come heaving o'er his soul, Richmond and Sharpsburg tlaundered by, With that tremendous fight Which gave him to the angel hosts Who watched the camp that night, We mourn for him who died for us

Its grand and awfulseroll;

With one resistless moan,

While up the Valley of the Lord, He marches to the throne, He kept the faith of men and saints, Sublime, and pure, and bright: He sleeps, and all is well with him Who watched the earsp that night, Brothers, the midnight of the cause Is shrouded in our fate;

The domon Goths pollute our soil With fire, and lust, and hate ;-Be strong, be valliant, be assured, Strike home for Heaven and right! The soul of Jackson stalks abroad And guards the camp to-night !
